ticeably strong exhibition. The most brilliant portraits are by Sargent, Shannon and Carolus Duran. Mr. Sargent has portraits of three ladies and a Queen's Counsel. The most remarkable one is the portrait of Mrs. Thursby, which conveys an impression of intended movement. The lady is about to rise from her chair and welcome her guest. Less dramatic in vividness, but more stately in her dignity and statuesque repose is Mrs. Anstruther Thomson, arrayed in a dark dress brilliantly painted. Mr. Shannon has three portraits, two of them girls of exceptional loveliness and grace. Carolus Duran's portrait of Lord Lennex's young daughter is one of the best works in the gallery, rivalling Watts's childish figure of early spring in delicacy, grace and brilliancy. Mr. Watts also has a sumptuous portrait of Mrs. Ivo Bligh, and a solemn landscape with a skeleton, silver cups and dice, representing the mystical answer to Ezeklel's question: "Can these bones live?" Sir Edward Burne-Jones has a high panel picture of St. George with a standard, and a more interesting and artistic study from the "Canterbury Tales," ereitled "The Prioress's Tale." Holman Hunt has a characteristic religious picture, strong in drawing, entitled "The Beloved." Mr. Waterhouse has a fine picture of Juliet, admirably drawn and harmonious in coloring. The best landscape is Mr. Peppercorn's "The mon." with good atmosphere and a blending of cool shades of gray and green. Mr. Alfred Parsons has several works of beautiful finish. Mr. George Wetherbee shows a series of graceful pastoral idylls, and Mr. Abbey a large work illustrating the recitation of verses by a poet to a group of ladies in a Florentine garden. Mr. Crane has a large decorative picture named 'The World's Conquerors." The young Scotch etcher, Mr. Cameron, has two brilliant studies in dull red with Velasquez effects, and Mrs. Marianne Stokes has a poem in canvas with a knight in armor embracing a girl with yellow hair. Mr. George Spencer Watson has painted a pretty woman with brilliant effect. Mr. Byam Shaw has undertaken the same task in a theatrical spirit, and Mr. Arthur Melville has taken the liberty of rendering Mrs. Graham Robertson ludicrous in an immense canvas. The exhibition, on the whole, is the best seen for four or five years, and is conspicuous for variety. high quality and vitality. The Academy will be opened at the end of next week.

The mystery respecting the so-called autobiography of Bismarck has not yet been solved; this is a work which agents have been attempting to negotiate on the strength of their supposed ability to deliver the goods. I am in formed on excellent authority that the work in question is nothing more than an authorized life which Prince Bismarck has read in manuscript, without writing it himself, and that it is not probable that it will be published until after his death. The Prince's relations with the German Emperor are better than they were, and it is doubtful if any book sanctioned by him will deal in a drastic way with the present sovereign or the Empress Frederick. Certainly Bismarck is not likely to offer any challenge to his enemies until he is in the grave.

PRIZE TAKEN TO KEY WEST. Key West, April 23.-The Spanish steamer Pedro, of Bilbao, was captured last evening. The torpedo-boat Foote was scouting about twelve miles off Havana shortly after 5 o'clock, and the weather was hazy. Suddenly the Foote signalled the New-York that a strange ship had been sighted, and the flagship started out.

When she saw the New-York heading for her the Spaniard scudded away at a fast clip. The New-York then fired the usual first shot as a signal to heave to, but the Pedro continued on her course. Then came a pretty chase. The cruiser fired several more small guns at the fleeing vessel and finally sent a solid shot across her bows. This brought the enemy to terms and she promptly hove to. A small boat was lowered from the New-York and Ensign Marble with a crew put off.

The wildest excitement prevailed on the Span tard, and her decks were crowded with sailors scurrying about like frightened rats as the New-York men clambered over the side.

Meantime the Foote had sighted a German coasting vessel and signalled to the flagship, and a shot was put across the stranger's bows. No resistance was offered, and the New-York men boarded her. They found her papers to be correct, and her German register was established. She was turned back.

The action of the fleet in refusing to allow the German vessel to enter Havana shows that the blockade is established.

In February, 1935, the Shenandoah made the run from San Francisco to New-York, with saimon and a California cargo, in ninety-six days. Her commander, James J Murphy, had wagered a champagne supper on the time of the voyage with two of his friends. He bet one of them that she would make the voyage in ninety-five days and he bet the other friend that she would finish the trip in ninety-three days. Therefore he had to give two suppers. The Shenandoah, however, was four days off Montauk Point in a gale, and she encountered severe weather off Harnegat. Everything emanating from Washington is dis-
